Made in Montecito

BY FLORA KONTILIS

PHOTOGRAPHY JIM BOB BARNETT

The following is a peek at four Montecito artists. Four local jewelers – David Tallman, Silverhorn, Jeremy Norris, and Daniel Gibbings – provide personal style, technique, and precision to their handcrafted treasures. While components of each piece come from all over the world, these pieces were designed and made by these jewelers in their Montecito studios.

"Made in Montecito" will be a continuing feature of the glossy edition of Montecito Journal. If you live and/or work in Montecito and, if you create jewels, art, furniture, clothing, or anything you believe has artistic or commercial value here, please contact Montecito Journal. We'll be pleased to highlight that work.

SILVERHORN

To wear a Silverhorn gem is to wear a piece of the world. Co-owners Mike and Carole Ridding travel above and beyond to capture their finds. The cabochon ring and earrings (3) are of Nigerian origin. Carole notes that the cushion-cut spessartite stone "is a rare orange garnet." The ring compliments its rarity as a 23.57carat gem, set in rose gold with a satin finish.

Perhaps the most eye appealing are the fire opal beads with wood bracelets (2). Carole beams that the opal beads are "extraordinarily significant," in that they were found in a new mine in Ethiopia. 18k gold spacers compliment each bead. Guatemala supplied the dark mora

(top) and orange osage wood for the bracelets. "We love the contrast of the [yellow] gold against the grain of the hardwoods," boasts Carole. The center stone is opal.

Move from enthusiasm to delicacy with the handmade white jade earrings (1). Rubellite tourmaline, from Nigeria, hold antique white jade, carved in China.

For more information call Silverhorn at 805-969-0442, or visit the studio at 1155 Coast Village Road, Montecito
